Jasper Plans Novel Arbor Day Meeting

On Friday, April 28th, the Jasper Central School will celebrate Arbor Day in a most fitting manner. Recently the local Home Bureau sponsored a talk on planning home grounds given by a specialist from the College of Agriculture at Ithaca. At that time several persons present expressed a desire to make the beautifying of the surroundings of the Central School a community project that would be a permanent benefit to everyone. Through the continued efforts of the local and the Steuben County Home Bureau the Jasper School Board has been able to secure the services of Mr. D. J. Bushey, landscaping specialist from the college, who will work with the local committee.

The program for April 28th calls for a gathering of the men and women interested in the landscaping work at 9:30 at the school. Mr. Bushey will lead an expedition into the nearby woods to look over the native materials available and to point out the shrubs, trees and plants that may be successfully used in landscaping. When some of the necessary materials have been located they will be taken up and moved to the school grounds. The ladies of Jasper are planning for a community dinner at noon after which the men will do the transplanting. Mr. Bushey will, in this one day, be able to work on only a part of the school grounds but he will plan with the group at the meeting the completion of the entire project.

Mr. Bushy is well known to many Steuben County folks as he has spoken at a number of community meetings and has conducted these beautification field days in a number of other communities in the county.

The Jasper Arbor Day ceebration is open to all who would be interested in attending and receiving the suggestions for landscaping, choice of native material and methods of transplating. If time allows Mr. Bushey plans to give a short talk immediately after dinner, bringing out the general points to be considered in planning the landscaping around any building. The local committee is planning to recruit a number of men who will be interested in assisting with the work and gaining the benefit of the experience. Jasper's plan for celebrating Arbor Day is one that might well be adopted by many other communities.

RATHBONE GRANGE

Rathbone Grange will meet in regular session Saturday evening, April 22. The men are expected to serve refreshments.

Horace G. Crane Sells Long Established Clothing Business

Albert Francis of New York purchases stock of high grade men's furnishings and clothing — Former owner desires to take rest—Stock will be closed out with sale.

The Crane Clothing Company, one of the old established firms in Addison, was sold yesterday to Albert Francis of New York. Mr. Francis will put on a clean-out sale beginning next week, and will sell this entire stock of high grade merchandise.

The announcement of Mr. Crane's sale will come as a complete surprise to most Addison people, who have come to regard the Crane clothing store as a permanent fixture in this village. Interviwed yesterday as to his plans, Mr. Crane stated he had nothing definitely in mind for the present. Four members of his family have died during the past few months. This trouble coupled with the fact his own health has not been of the best for some little time, influenced Mr. Crane to retire from active business for a while and take a long deserved rest.

Horace G. Crane has been identified with business circles in Addison for more than thirty years. He first went into the clothing business in partnership with Mr. Ritchie forming the firm of Crane and Ritchie. Later he purchased Mr. Ritchie's interest in the business, which has gone under the name of the Crane Clothing Company ever since. During his long career here Mr. Crane has conducted a flourishing clothing and men's furnishing business. Square dealing, fair treatment of customers and the reputation he quickly earned of handling high quality merchandise, brought Mr. Crane trade from a wide circle around Addison.

Mr. Crane has always been active in civic affairs of the village. He is a director in the First National Bank of Addison, and a trustee of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Francis states the large stock of high grade merchandise in the Crane store will be closed out at sensationally low prices. The next issue of this paper will carry a large advertisement of the sale, giving full particulars.

Samuel Leroy Perkins

The funeral of Samuel Leroy Perkins was held from the home of his son, Walter Perkins, on the Addison-Corning road at two o'clock Monday afternoon. The Rev. William L. Deighton, pastor of the Addison Methodist Episcopal Church officiated and burial was made in Addison Rural Cemetery. The bearers were the six sons of the deceased.

The death of Samuel Perkins occurred about ten o'clock Friday morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Rice on Steuben street, after an illness of less than a week.

Born in the town of Tuscarora August 27, 1853, the son of Samuel and Mary Etta Brown Perkins, all of his life with the exception of the last three years, when he lived in Addison, was spent in the towns of Rathbone and Tuscarora where he was engaged in farming and was highly esteemed for his honesty and uprightness.

He was married November, 4, 1884 to Jennie Fuller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Fuller of Tuscarora. Mrs. Perkins' death occurred December 14, 1906.

Deceased is survived by six sons, Frank M. of Corning; Raymond of Canisteo; Lawrence of Painted Post; Samuel A. of Rathbone; Walter L. and Roy Perkins of Addison; two daughters, Mrs. Charles Rice of Addison and Mrs. Mary Carpenter of Campbell; a sister, Mrs. Alma Coffield of S. Dakota and the following grandchildren: Walter Perkins, Jr., Warren Perkins, Doris and Burdette Rice and Miss Freda Andrews of Addison; Lester and Velma Perkins of Rathbone; Margery Perkins and Wendell Andrews of Canisteo; Robert and Gail Perkins of Corning; Harry and Bernice Carpenter of Campbell, besides several nephews and nieces.

Bert Harry Badly Injured In Fall From Wagon

Bert Harry suffered serious injuries in an accident on his farm off the Tracy Creek road Friday. Mr. Harry had driven his team into the woods for a load of wood and was jolted from the wagon when the front wheels dropped into a hole. Suffering excruciating pain he realized that his chances of being found in that location were slim indeed and managed, by degrees, to pull and work himself out into an open field where his cries for help finally were heard and assistance came, nearly three hours after the accident occurred. The injured man was brought to his home on Steuben street and upon examination by a physician it was found that a tendon was broken below the knee. This will necessitate an operation as soon as the swelling subsides sufficiently to permit it.

TO CHOOSE CANDIDATES FOR BEER CONTROL

A special meeting of Steuben County Medical Association will be held today, Thursday, to choose six members to be candidates for the new beer control board. The names will be submitted to Walter M. Goff, chairman of the Board of Supervisors, who will appoint one out of the six to fill the newly created office.

Many Changes Seen in Steuben County During Past 100 Years

In 1826 the town of Howard was twice as large as Hornellsville (Hornell) — Cameron was the size of Addison—Pioneer names still carried by descendants in many Steuben villages.

By William H. Rial

Picture, if you may, Steuben county in its pioneer set-up. Families of today are justly proud of the spirit and grit exhibited by their ancestors whohelped depelop the resources and contributed to the industry of the realm.

The writer possesses a book issued by Edwin Williams and published by J. Leavitt at No 182 Broadway, entitled The New York Register for 1830, which gives much interesting and valuable data concerning the county of Steuben.

Steuben Postmasters of 1832

It must be kept in mind that the boundaries in that period were different and some of the subject matter will seem strange. For instance, what reply would you make to a querry regarding Doty's Corners, Goff's Mills, Hammond's Mills, Jersey, Rock Stream, Sugar Hill, Wardsburgh or Tobehanna?

Andrew Jackson was President and William T. Barry postmaster General. Charles K. Gardner, assistant postmaster General, and the Albany, N. Y., postoffice on January 1, 1832, posted the Steuben county directory of postmasters as follows:

Addison, James Brownell; Arkport, Christopher Hulbert; Avoca, James Silsbee; Bath, W. S. Hubbell; Cameron, Elias Mason; Campbelltown,Samuel Besley; Canisteo, Philander Harston; Cohocton, Paul C. Cook; Doty's Corners, Paul Doty; East Wheeler, Clemons C. Palmer; Goff's Mills, William Goff; Greenwood, Levi Davis; Hammond's Mills, Samuel Bixby; Hampshire, Henry Prentice; Hornby, A. B. Dickinson; Hornellsville, Ira Davenport; Howard, Randall Graves; Jasper, Henry Phoenix; Jersey, Charles McClave; Kennedyville, (Kanona) Brigham Hanks; Lindleytown, Ethan Pier; Loon Lake, James Brownson; Mead's Creek, David Kimball; Mt. Bowen; Tobehanna, William Prentiss; Troupsburg, William Card; Tyrone, Sylvanus Arnold Urbana, William Hastings; Wayne, Enos Silsbee; West Troupsburg. William DeWitt; Woodhull, Caleb Smith.

County Officers and Attorneys

Alva Ellas of Bath was Steuben county sheriff in 1830; David Rumsey, county clerk; William Woods, Surrogate; Edward Howell, district attorney.

In the state of New York were 1,688 attorneys and counsellors at law. Attorneys in Steuben county were: George C. Edwards, Edward Howell, Ziba A. Leland, David Mc Master, Henry G. Rogers, William Woods, and Benjamin C. Cook. An extract from Rule 7 of the Supreme Court read: "Every attorney shall have an agent in each place where there is a clerk's office, except in the city or town where such attorney keeps his office. No person shall be an agent unless he be an attorney of the court or deputy clerk in the clerk's office."

In the Court of Common Pleas, George C. Edwards was first judge for Steuben county. Other judges were: Jacob Van Valkenburgh, Henry S. Williams, Paul C. Cook, and John Cooper. Court convened

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Miller, of Goodhue street passed their 55th wedding anniversary last Saturday. In commemoration of the event on Sunday the couple were surprised with a family dinner, served at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Forrest Perry.

Besides the honor guests those present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, Jr., of Elmira, Mrs. Carrie Crittenden, Mr. nd Mrs. Maurice Miller, Miss Louise Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Elroy O. Hannahs, Miss Almeda Hannahs, Miss Eather Hannahs, Wilbur Hannahs, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard B, Hoaglin, Miss Genevieve Hoaglin, Miss Evelyn Perry, Betty Perry, and Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Perry.

Milk Control Board Raises Prices Throughout State

Action has been taken by the Milk Control Board in the matter of fixing the minimum prices of milk and cream in cities and villages in New York State of more than 1,000 population, exclusive of New York City and the counties of Westchester, Nassau and Suffolk. The order was signed by the Commissioner of Agriculture Charles H. Baldwin, Commissioner of Health Thomas Parran, Jr., and Kenneth F. Fee.

The following minimum prices on milk and cream were established:

Milk	By Milk Dealers to Consumers	By Milk Dealers to Stores	By Stores to Consumers
Quarts in bottles	10c	8c	9c
Pints in bottles	6c	5c	6c
½ Pints in bottles	—	3c	—
Bulk per quart	—	6c	—
Cream—40% Fat
Quarts in bottles	62c	45c	—
Pints in bottles	34c	25c	—
½ pints in bottles	18c	14c	16c
Bulk cream per quart	—	41c	—

It was further ordered by the Board that in any city or village where two or more grades or classes of milk have been sold during the period January 1, 1933 to March 31, 1933, or are being sold at a price differential between such grades or classes, the average price differential existing during such period shall be maintained above the minimum prices herein established, if such price differential does not exceed two cents per quart; but if such price differential during such period has exceeded two cents per quart the minimum price of such recognized grades or classes shall be two cents above the minimum price hereinabove fixed.

It was further ordered that in the case of cream containing less than 40 per cent milk fat the minimum prices charged shall be computed at the same rate per pound of milk fat as in the case of cream with fat content of 40 per cent.

Minimum prices, it was decided, shall not apply to milk sold to or on account of public welfare officials and charity agencies for distribution for relief purposes. And the minimum prices pursuant to Chapter 158 of the Laws of 1933

HIGHER MILK PRICES

It looks as though the first local effect of the new Pitcher milk law, will be to boost the price of milk in villages like Addison to ten cents a quart. According to a recent ruling, ten cents a quart is to be the minimum price for bottled milk in communities with more than 1,000 population. As Addison has a population of about 1,600 persons it will be governed by the same price category as cities.

Speaking from an impartial viewpoint it is hard to understand why people in country villages should be placed in the same consumers' minimum price class as residents of the metropolitan area. Most dealers in small villages actually keep their own dairies and sell directly from the farm to the consumer. They cut out a middleman's profit, one or more handling and trucking charges, as well as the freight rate from shipping point to the city. They are able to employ lower priced help to work on the delivery wagons.

However, as the law now stands it looks as if local dealers would have to increase the price of bottled milk, whether they wish to or not. This probably will work a hardship on some persons who are having difficulty enough now, buying their milk and meeting other living expenses.

The Pitcher bill was enacted into law as an attempt to relieve the distress of the dairy farmer. If the increase in milk prices can be handed to the producers of fluid milk throughout New York State, the new law will be a boon to rural residents whether they be on the farms or in the villages. The depressingly low prices received by New York dairy farmers has been felt almost as keenly in the villages as on the farms. Though no one will enjoy paying a higher price for milk right now, if the farmer benefits materially by the increased consumer minimum, then we shall all be willing to pay our share of the bill to bring prosperity back to rural New York.

PUTTING THE CITY MEN OUTDOORS

The greatest value of President Roosevelt's plan for putting a quarter of a million young men at work in outdoor labor, of a kind which is somewhat vaguely referred to as "forestry", seems to us to be that it will probably save most of these men from becoming bums.

As we understand the plan only those between 18 and 25 years old and having some dependent relatives were accepted at first. They applied at an Army recruiting station, armed with a letter from some recognized local relief or welfare association, testifying to their worthiness as objects of relief. They were then put through a physical examination at the recruiting station.

Those who passed these preliminary tests were required to enlist for six months, signing an agreement to perform whatever duties they might be assigned to and not to destroy any government property. They then went at once on the payroll, at the rate of one dollar a day with food, clothing and shelter included. Each recruit, however, was required to sign an assignment of part of his pay, approximately three-quarters of it, to the dependent wife, mother, sister or brother, to be paid direct to the beneficiary.

The recruits of this Army of Peace were then sent to the nearest military post for a period of "conditioning", which includes regular exercise and drill, instruction in taking care of their bodies while living in the open, amenability to discipline and the building up of their physical stamina. This conditioning was expected to take from four to six weeks. When completed, the men are sent in squads to the places where they are to labor on public works.

Precisely where this work will be done and what it will consist of is not fully explained as yet. Presumably it will be in the various National Forests, though there is talk of the Government buying a million acres or so of unreclaimed land and putting these men to work on that.

It seems to us that the actual work accomplished is of less importance than the building up of the men who do it, getting them into the habit of hard work, enabling them to contribute something, however slight, to the support of others, and taking them off the city streets into the wholesome outdoors.

We shall watch this experiment with interest.

CONGRESS WILL STICK AROUND

Some of the new members of Congress who came to Washington believing they would "get through and go home in about a week" have changed their minds; and now the leaders on Capitol Hill expect the Nation's law mill will be kept grinding until late in the Spring.

RACIAL HATREDS

"We are a white race and a Negro race here together—we are here to live together. The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that the love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because in the great things in life no matter what they are, it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that."

It was an Alabama judge who said that, a white man, a gentleman of the oldest American stock. Judge Horton, in charging the jury, was speaking only of the exhibitions of race prejudice in the course of the trial of the unfortunate Negroes who were convicted of assaulting two white women in Scottsboro, but he might have been speaking for and to the whole world.

Not in many years perhaps not in centuries, have there been such violent outbreaks of racial hatreds as have been manifesting themselves in these troublous times. In Germany the Nazi government has proclaimed its hatred of the Jews to the point of barring them from almost every phase of the national life. Between the Germans and the Poles hatred is so intense that when the shadow of a German flag, on the Polish border, fell upon Polish soil, there was an indignant protest by the Polish government! The Italian people are developing a new national pride which has racial intolerance as its foundation. And we do not need to point to the racial hatreds which have barred the Orientals from Australia and the United States.

We do not by any means advocate opening the doors to all sorts and conditions of men, but we do believe that these racial hatreds are a step backward and not forward in the world's progress. We believe that it is possible for all the people of the world to get along amicably, since we are all in the world and can't get out of it. If it proves impossible, because of the stirring up of racial hatreds by prejudiced or malicious interests, then we can see nothing ahead but a complete collapse of civilization as we know it and a return to the Dark Ages when every man's hand was turned against his brother.

DRAINAGE

President Roosevelt's announced policy of helping farm conditions is causing intensive study of every phase of agriculture by the specialists and engineers in Washington who have made reports on conditions. Subject of discussion among the agricultural experts has turned to methods and means of making farms pay better with less expenditure of money. In discussing the situation as it is found in a number of states including Indiana, Illinois and Ohio, it is pointed out that one of the great questions has to do with proper drainage. Figures of the situation in these states collected by the United States Department of Agriculture for the 1930 census have recently been made available. They contain a study of the drainage of agricultural lands with statistics for the states and counties.

These statistics show that an enormous amount of land needs drainage. Hundreds of thousands of acres of land are unfit to raise any crop on account of lack of drainage.

The general situation throughout the country is that there is a lack of drainage enterprises and that where drainage enterprises exist protection against overflow becomes an important object. Great numbers of ditches in drainage areas frequently fail to function properly because they are permitted to fill up. The repeated dry seasons of past years may give place, it is believed, according to the law of averages, to a wet summer and the many miles of open ditches will prove a menace because heavy rains will cause water to back up into them and overflow. Many of these drainage ditches are filled with weeds, silt and debris.

The important point in the deliberations of many of the agricultural experts is this: that the lands in danger of overflow because the ditches are not cleaned out, are among the richest to be found, as they will produce better crops at less expense for fertilizer and at less labor than much of the other land. Therefore, the farmer is actually spending more and getting less by failure to have the ditches cleaned out. The constructive efforts of cleaning ditches and bringing under cultivation the vast acreage involved would, it is pointed out, be a substantial help during the coming fall to the farmers.

The subject has been up for discussion in official Washington circles because the drainage to be effective should be done now before the crops are in.

WHAT ABOUT RUSSIA?

One of the most important problems which confronts the new administration at Washington is the recognition of the Soviet government of Russia. The policy of non-recognition which has been pursued by three successive administrations must shortly be reconsidered. "It seems a great pity", declares the American Magazine, "that the United States should be the only one of the great powers which has deliberately excluded itself from exercising any influence in the most populous nations in Europe". Diplomatic relations might prove hard to maintain, but many Americans feel that the stake is sufficiently important to justify an attempt to do it.

...writes of "THE MASTER EXECUTIVE"

Supplying a week-to-week inspiration for the heavy-burdened who will find every human trial paralleled in the experiences of "The Man Nobody Knows."

A "MANY-SIDED" MAN

JESUS WAS, as we say, "many sided," and every man sees the side of his nature which appeals most to himself.

The doctor thinks of the great physician whose touch never failed, who by some mystery preceded modern science in its still imperfect knowledge of the relation of the spirit to health. The preacher studies the Sermon on the Mount and marvels that truths so profound should be expressed in words so clear and simple. The agitator remembers only that he denounced the rich; and the communist that his disciples carried common purse. Lawyers have written in praise of his pleading at his trial; and the literary critics of every age have cheerfully acknowledged his mastery.

Bruce Barton

I am not a doctor, or lawyer or critic but an advertising man. As a profession advertising is young; as a force it is as old as the world. The first four words ever uttered, "Let there be light," constitute its charter. All Nature is vibrant with its impulse. The brilliant plumage of the bird is color advertising addressed to the emotions of its mate. Plants deck hemselves with blossoms, not for beauty only, but to attract the patronage of the bee and so by spreading pollen on its wings, to insure the perpetuation of their kind.

The spacious firmament on high,
And all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled Heavens a shining frame,

It has been remarked that "no astronomer can be an atheist," which is only another way of saying that no man can look up at the first and greatest electric sign—the evening stars—and refuse to believe its message: "There is a Cause: A God." I propose in the next few articles to speak of the advertisements of Jesus which have survived for twenty centuries and are still the most potent influence in the world.

Let us begin by asking why he was so successful in mastering public attention and why, in contrast, his churches are less so? The answer is twofold. In the first place he recognized the basic principles that all good advertising is news. He was never trite or commonplace; he had no routine. If there had been newspapers in those days, no city editor could have said, "No need to visit him to-day; he will be doing just what he did last Sunday." Reporters would have followed him every single hour, for it was impossible to predict what he would say or do; every action and word were news. I repeat. Jesus had no routine. He was never trite or commonplace.

Sunday School Lesson

by Rev. Charles E. Dunn.

Jesus Rebukes Self-Seeking
Lesson for April 23rd, Mark 9:30-50.
Golden Text: Romans 13:10.

All of us crave popularity. It is human to seek recognition. But it is foolish to scramble for it. The disciples, in their quarrel as to who was the greatest, and therefore entitled to the honors of rank and precedence, form a sorry picture.

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

Jesus, with characteristic directness, at once plunged to the root of the whole issue. Greatness, He insisted, is not the fruit of the aggressive seizure of power, but of its renunciation. "If any one wishes to be first, he must be last of all and servant of all." This means that the humble, obscure workman behind the scenes, an unheralded hero never in the limelight, never responding to a curtain call with its ringing applause, may be, by God's standard, first in value and esteem. He it is who, when the kingdom of heaven is established, will be called from his inconspicuous position to a post of leadership.

Then the Master gave a concrete demonstration of this principle. Taking a little child, He placed him in their midst, embraced him, and then uttered those memorable words, "Whoever for my sake receives one such young child as this, receives me." That child, with its trustful eyes so full of wonder, its innocence, its beauty, its simple faith, unspoiled by the sordid, selfish brutalities of our blighted world, both rebuked the grasping disciples, and gave them a needed lesson.

Was Jesus mistaken in his glorification of the child? No indeed. Havelock Ellis maintains that the average man of genius, both in physique and temperament, is childlike. "The progress of our race," he says "has been a progress in youthfulness."

One other saying of the Master in this lesson deserves careful study. It is the declaration, "He who is not against us is for us." How largehearted! How generous! How we find the secret of the Master's superb tolerance and magnaminity.

IN LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

by CARL H. GETZ

Nearly 125 baby tropical fish are born in a New York department store every day.

Rooms numbered 606 and 909 have been eliminated from a number of New York hotels because persons often forget the number of their rooms, look at their keys, hold the numbers upside down and go to the wrong floor.

There is nothing like an excavation to attract a crowd in New York.

Thirty-two languages are spoken in New York.

Go down to First avenue and you will see meat markets displaying deep sea octopus for sale.

Called on a business man down town this week and when I asked for him, his secretary said he was in his bath. Having a bath room adjacent to an office was a new one on me.

There are more legitimate theatres in New York than in the 16 next largest cities combined.

The man with the telescope who trusts that there are still a number of persons here willing to pay ten cents to get a close-up of the moon is to be seen in the city.

In New York there is an organization known as "The Woman Pays Club." The idea is to encourage girls to pay their own way when taken to lunch by men.

The City Hall here is considered by architects and artists to be one of the most successful examples of the Colonial school of architecture in America today. It was completed in 1812.

More and more wild fowl is making the New York Zoological Park its home. The keepers of the zoo don't mind although it does cost money to feed the birds.

There are hundreds of families in New York who are trying to find some means to acquire possession of a farm. The average unemployed family head, according to a recent study, would go on a farm in a minute if he had the chance.

POLICEMAN . . . . still going up

Nearly forty years ago, Theodore Roosevelt, then police commissioner of New York, advertised for bright young men of good character to become policemen. Among those who responded was an upstanding young man named Edward P. Mulrooney.

Mulrooney "pounded the pavement" and learned all about the business of policing the world's greatest city. He never took a drink, never gambled, never dissipated in any way and never took a dollar or a favor for doing his duty—or for not doing it, for that matter. He rose through all the grades to Inspector, and then was appointed to the post which Theodore Roosevelt once held, Police Commissioner of New York.

Now, my friend Ed Mulrooney has been asked by the Governor of New York to be the head of the State Beer Commission. The great danger in the legalization of beer and the probable repeal of prohibition is that the liquor business may again become the tool of crooked politicians and the handmaiden of crime. With Ed Mulrooney in charge the crooks and grafters won't have a Chinaman's chance to get in their dirty work.

Few gardens are too crowded for a strawberry bed. The free Cornell bulletin E-211 tells how to grow strawberries, suggests varieties, fertilizer, and answers the questions growers want to know. TODAY and TOMORROW

by FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

DIRIGIBLES . . . . . important

I hope the fate of the airship Akron will not throw Congress into such a panic that it will refuse to appropriate funds for futher development of lighter-than-air craft.

I have long believed that the dirigible is a far more valuable military arm than the airplane. We don't stop building airplanes because scores of brave young officers are killed every year when military planes crash. The safety of the nation is more important than a few lives.

The time will come when the airship will be perfected to the point where it will be the principal means of passenger transportation all over the world. Of that I am firmly convinced. But no private concern can spend the money necessary to the perfection of the dirigible. It must be done by Governments, and the expenditure justified by the airship's value as a means of national defense.

ARMY . . . . . too expensive

A high officer of the Army has had the courage to tell the world that the Army costs too much.

Major General Johnson Hagood, commanding the Eighth Corps Area, says: "It takes three hundred million dollars a year to run the Army under its present organization. We can get a better organization for less."

That is a slap in the face for the bureaucrats who have piled up fat office jobs in Washington for Army officers who ought to be out in the field working at something else.

There is nothing the United States needs less than it needs an expensive Army. General Hagood admits that he has twice as many staff officers and clerks as he needs, but he can't get rid of them under the present set-up.

The danger of a large standing Army is that its officers too often are inclined to forget that they are the servants of the people and to assume that they are the masters.

GOVERNOR . . . . . right man

Frank Murphy, Mayor of Detroit, who is going to the Philippines as Governor-General is one of the progressive young men who are coming to the front in America's public affairs.

He is not going to have an easy job as successor to Theodore Roosevelt, Jr. in Manila. But Frank Murphy doesn't care about easy jobs.

Congress has voted to give the Philippines independence, if they behave themselves, in the course of a dozen years or so. The Filipinos themselves are divided on the question whether or not they want independence. Some are afraid that once Uncle Sam removes his protecting arm Japan will jump in and grab off the islands. The new Governor-General will have a lot of conflicting ideas to reconcile, and it is not at all impossible that he may have to keep a pretty close eye on Jaban himself.

MINISTER . . . . . a woman

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen is to be United States Minister to the Court of Denmark. My first reaction to that news is that it is Denmark's gain and America's loss.

There is no particular glory attached to being the diplomatic representative of America to the minor governments of Europe. President Hoover once said to me: "Any man who is a good enough politician to be a county chairman, knows how to wear evening clothes, and has good table manners, is qualified to be Minister to most European countries."

Mrs. Owen, however, will reflect glory upon her new job, and will carry herself in a way to reflect credit upon the women of America, thus honored by this first selection of one of their sex to a high diplomatic post. Nobody can know Mrs. Owen without admiring and liking her.

Jobless Enlisting in Reforestation Service Army

Herewith is pictured the launching of the recruiting drive to enlist 250,000 unemployed for President Roosevelt's Reforestation Service plan. The enlistments are for 6 months duration for jobless between the ages of 18 and 25 years. They receive $1 per day and the applications are passed upon by relief committees in the respective territories. One provision is that those given jobs shall assign at least three-fourths of their pay to dependents. Enlistments are made at army enlistment quarters following which those accepted are sent to army camps for conditioning after which they receive assignments by the Department of Labor. Photo No. 1 shows jobless making applications. No. 2 shows meals being served recruits from rolling army kitchens and No. 3 shows recruits off for conditioning camps.

Need For International Reciprocity Seen By Washington Observers

Washington, April 17,—Beer is back and the first day's sales are said to have netted the Federal government and the various state and local taxing units about ten million dollars, which is a lot of money. Some brewers sent President Roosevelt a few cases of beer which arrived at the White House just after midnight on the day when its sale was legal. The President gave the beer to various friends and that was that.

What is worrying the wets is that Mr. Roosevelt has not said anything about the repeal of the 18th amendment. The President's friends reply that there isn't anything for him to say. The repeal amendment is up to the states, and most of them have arranged or are arranging for conventions at which either to ratify it or turn it down. It is hardly likely that Mr. Roosevelt will use his influence one way or the other.

Invitation to Nations

The really important development in Washington is the invitation by the President to the heads of eleven other nations to come to Washington to see him, or to send somebody, in order to talk over the world economic situation and get ready for the World Economic Conference, which is to be held in London in July. Ramsay McDonald, Prime Minister of Great Britain was the first to accept. All of the other nations are sending their best men. The President plans to talk to each of them separately, get them to agree to something to which they will stick when the conference is called, in the hope that some line of action can be arrived at which will start commodity prices moving upward, stabilize the world's currencies and move the wheels of international trade again.

This is not an altruistic project to save the world. The President is undertaking something for the sake of the United States first and the world at large in consequence. Whatever we put in the pot he expects us to get back with something besides. The old foreign trade policiy of the United States has been definitely scrapped.

No longer will the effort be to open foreign markets to our goods while barring foreign goods by by means of high tariffs. That is certain. So when the President starts to persuare other countries to lower their tariff barriers he must have in mind that such a program can succeed only if we rearrange our tariffs to permit the sale of foreign goods in this country.

Time for Reciprocity

The need for this reciprocity on our part is inescapable. For even if we could trade our war debt claims for a lowering of foreign tariffs on our exports, without reciprocal action on our part we would get nowhere. For, as the President's advisors point out, there is no earthly way for other nations to pay for our goods unless they can sell us their goods.

Wise observers here say that the policy of "economic nationalism" has been definitely scrapped by the invitations to Great Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Japan, China, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico and Canada to talk over international economies at Washington. Some go so far as to suggest the League of Nations will be functioning here more strongly than at Geneva. It seems likely that more immediate and tangible results may follow these conferences than have followed the League's action, for in this case the United States has the whip hand and can apply economic pressure to make the other nations come to reasonable terms .

Must Have New Revenues

That there will be some new forms of Federal taxes to make up the vast sums which are to be spent in the various projects for relieving the domestic situation seems as certain as tomorrow's sunrise. Nobody knows yet what form these new taxes will take.

The orignal idea of the Administration of lending money based on Federal credit only to self-liquidating public works seems to have been abandoned. There is not enough of that sort of work to be done to go very far in putting all the unemployed back to work.

With the plans for farm relief, home-mortgage relief, unemployment relief, bank deposit insurance and all of the other enterprises which must be financed against the credit of the United States it is estimated that from five to ten thousand million dollars of credit will be required.

The balancing of the budget is the first step toward making the Government's credit good so that it can go to the public and borrow the necessary funds for these other projects on bond issues.

Money, Men and Plans

In Congress there is a powerful group which believes that budget-balancing, international agreements, public works bond issues, railroad, banking and utility reorganization, farm releif and everything else will accomplish nothing unless there is inflation of the currency. The project to reduce the amount of gold in the dollar is the latest scheme to this end. It is not regarded here as meeting the President's approval. It seems more likely that some sort of a silver purchase program by international agreement may be decided upon.

Many members of both houses see salvation only in broadening the bases of employment by means of the five-day six-hour week, at higher pay, Some others hold that there must be an actual redistribution of capital through a capital levy, income tax changes or a simple confiscation of capital and income above certain figures.

And when it comes to internaional agreements, there are more different ideas than there members of Congress. The insistence that Europe must pay her war debts in full is not so vociferous as a few months ago.

The President hears a bedlam of advice daily. So far it does not seem to worry him. There are all sorts of people urging him to "go on the air" and urge all debtors and creditors to sit down together and agree on a general reduction of debts. There are others by the hundreds urging him to adopt some wild scheme or other. But the President keeps working away at the blue-prints of what, his intimates say, is a definite, integrated plan, to be adopted step by step.

Loretta Turnbull of Long Beach, Calif., champion woman speedboat driver of the United States celebrated her coronation as "Queen of Speedboats" by driving another winning race in launching the 1933 season.

Lost 40 Pounds On Doctor's Advice

"I'm a user of Kruschen Salts as a reducing remedy and can say they are fine. Have lost more than 40 lbs. in the past year. Am gradually reducing as my doctor advises". Miss Bertha Waldo, Haman, N. Dak. (Oct. 30, '32).

Once a day take Kruschen Salts—one-half teaspoonful in a glass of hot water first thing every morning. Besides losing ugly fat SAFELY you'll gain in health and physical attractiveness—constipation, gas and acidity will cease to bother—you'll feel younger—more active—full of ambition—clear skin — sparkling eyes.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world—but demand and get Kruschen and if one bottle doesn't joyfully please you—money back.

Addison Represented On Three-quarter Century Club

Addison people will be interested to know this place was well represented at the fourth annual frolic of the Three-quarters Century Club, held in St. Petersburg, Fla., the latter part of March.

Mrs. Minnie Harden was one of the leaders in the group which presented a series of old fashioned dances to the crowd of six thousand people assembled in historical Williams Park. The St. Petersbeug Advocate stated: "The dancers were graceful and dignified and appeared very young 'for their years'."

Among the active "oldsters" who took part in the frolic were Grandma Martha Weeks, of Lithia, Fla., who boasts 106 candles on her birthday cake, Capt. Charles W. Eldridge, a youth of 102, seventeen young kids in their nineties and a large group of eighty-year olds.

Eligibility to the Three-quarters Century Club is based upon cheating the Grim Reaper for seventy-five years or more. It is undoubtedly the most frolicsome organization of old people on the face of the earth.

Eugene Wade was in Hedgesville Monday.

Nation's Best Milk Supply Used by New York Consumers

Commissioner Baldwin Describes Milk Control System of New York State—Safety, Quality Assured

By CHARLES H. BALDWIN
Commissioner, Department of Agriculture and Markets Albany, New York

NEW YORK STATE consumers probably have the safest and highest quality milk in this nation, and that means in the world.

It is a far cry from the days when a special commission reported to the Legislature in 1882 that out of 500,000 quarts of milk furnished daily to New York City, 200,000 quarts were water or skimmed milk. Recently the milk from 61,000 producers, 915 vendors, 1220 stores and restaurants was examined and showed that less than 3/10 of one per cent was below the state standards!

The high quality of the State's milk supply is due to scientific standards of production, processing, transportation and delivery, at every point from the farm to the consumer's doorstep; established and enforced by the State, the health officials of New York City and other municipalities of the State; and faithfully and efficiently carried out by the producers, transportation companies and distributors.

When you, as a city consumer, comfortably reach out to your doorstep for the bottle of cool fresh milk which so regularly appears there each morning, have you ever thought of the fact that the bottle may have come from a nearby crossroad or from the farthest corner of the State, hundreds of miles away—or even from another State?

The fluid milk which finds its way every day in the year to the tables in the State amounts to about 6,000,000 quarts and is worth nearly $1,000,000. Gathered in one place, it would fill a pool 100 feet wide, 200 feet long and 10 feet deep. It comes from 800,000 cows in New York and six neighboring states.

When we consider the army of milkers, the fleets of trucks and wagons, the long trains of refrigrator and milk tank cars, the hundreds of gathering stations and bottling plants, the 14,000 pasteurizing plants, to say nothing of the millions of milk bottles—nearly 1,000,000 of which must be replaced every day—we begin to see beyond our doorstep and to realize the magnitude of the industry.

To provide each consumer with enough pure, safe milk, day in and day out, is a problem in both public health and economics. The milk supply is carefully watched from two standpoints—quality and safety. The law, among many regulations, forbids the sale of any substance in imitation or in semblance of milk or cream that is not milk or cream, as defined by the law.

There are also provisions that all milk must contain not less than 3 per cent of butter fat, 11½ per cent of solids, and not more than 81½ per cent of water; that declare to be adulterated any milk from which any part of the cream has been removed or to which has een added water or any other form of substance whatever; that declare to be adulterated any cream that contains less than 18 per cent of milk fat; and that provide that milk must be produced by sanitary methods from healthy cows and under sanitary conditions.

It is the function of the State, through the Departments of Agriculture and Markets and Health, and the local health authorities, to enforce these milk standards. The success of this enforcement for the protection of the consumers is evidenced by the premier place of the State's milk supply among all others.

Warren Speaks To 1000 Meetings

Broadcast From WGY April 21 — Farm Families Plan Supper and Programs of Entertainment

Farm leaders in more than a thousand New York state communities plan to hold meetings Friday evening, April 21, to discuss the farm situation. Carl E. Ladd, dean of the state colleges of agriculture and home economics, introduces Dr. G. F. Warren who discusses the present business situation in a radio address from WGY at Schenectady, at 8:30 P. M.

This is the first of a proposed series of community supper meetings for farm families in each community to discuss problems, led by persons of national repute who speak to all the groups at once by means of radio. Following Dr. Warren's address, a member of each group leads a discussion of the topic presented. Similar discussions have proved successful when tried on a smaller scale, but the proposed series, according to leaders at the college, is the most extensive to be organized to date.

The local community programs will vary in the local entertainment and discussion, but it is expected that most of the groups will hold a community supper sponsored by the local extension organization of the farm bureau, of 4-H clubs. Some of the meals are already planned on a low cost basis and include New York state products. Some of the menus include only products grown within the county. In counties where the 4-H groups are organized, the boys and girls plan to serve the supper.

It is further ordered that a deposit of not less than three cents per bottle shall be charged for all milk or cream sold by stores to consumers in bottles.

It was further ordered that in the case of milk sold to or on account of welfare and charitable agencies and to hospitals and eleemosynary institutions, the minimum prices shall be the prices required by the foregoing schedule to be charged by milk dealers to stores.

The minimum prices do not apply to certified milk nor to milk sold to the state or any municipality, or to the Federal Government upon bids.

The order is effectivce at 1:00 A. M,. on Monday, April 17, 1933.

Addison milk dealers have notified their customers of the increased price of milk here, brought about by the minimum established by the Milk Control Board.

It is noticed that cream prices in Addison have been considerably higher than the schedule suggested by the Milk Control Board. Local people are wondering if Addison milk dealers will reduce their cream prices, bringing them in line with those to be charged in New York State cities. —Ed's note.

State Senators Are Accused of Stealing Bills From Assemblymen

Seeking Glory the "Easiest Way"

Albany, Apr. 18—The closing days of the Legislature witnessed some bitter accusations from the floor of the Assembly to the effect that Democratic members of the Senate had "appropriated" legislation introduced in the lower house, and palmed it off as their own. An investigation of the proceeding shows the charges were well founded. This was particularly true of measures of benefit to up-State territory, concerning which the average New York Senator has very little knowledge. In one case a Democratic Senator did not even trouble to rewrite, but took the printed bill of a Republican, scratched out the latter's name, put on his own, and sent it in as his. He succeeded in passing it in the Senate, but since the legislation was unimportant, though good, the Assembly killed the bill as a rebuke to the Senate's practice of pilfering.

Strutting in Borrowed Plumage

There has always been a little of this business of trying to strut in borrowed plumage in the legislative halls here, but old-timers say that never before has either branch undertaken to make a business of it as was done by the Senate this year. A record of the bill thefts is being made and when some of the strutters start in next fall's campaign to claim credit that belongs to another, they are likely to be confronted with a disconcerting array of facts.

Why Albany Doesn't Want a Market

Three bills were introduced in the Legislature this year for the establishment of regional farm markets—one, to be known as the Hudson-Mohawk District, for Albany and surrounding counties; another the Central New York, with Cortland and neighboring counties; a third, the lower Hudson, including the territory immediately north of New York City. Two of them passed, but the one concerning Albany did not. It was understood that the Democratic bosses of Albany did not want the market here. It is well known that the marketing racket has furnished Tammany with one of its most important sources of income in New York City. And that would not be possible with such a market as the above bills call for. Except for an initial appropriation of $5000 each, these projects will cost the New York taxpayers nothing. The Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation will furnish the funds to build them and they are expected to pay for themselves in a few years.

New Milk Board Acts Quickly

The newly created State Milk Control Board established under the Pitcher act lost no time in getting to work. Last Wednesday the Governor appointed as executive director and third member of the Board Kenneth F. Fee, director of the dairy and food bureau in the Department of Agriculture, the other two members being commissioner Charles H. Baldwin of the department and Dr. Thomas Parran, Jr., Health Commissioner. At the board's first meeting on Thursday it tentatively fixed the following prices to be charged consumers for milk: A minimum of 10 cents a quart for milk delivered to homes; a minimum of 9 cents for milk sold by stores over the counter; a minimum of 8 cents for bottled milk sold to stores. This step of fixing a minimum price to consumers was taken because it is held that ruinous price wars among dealers have been in large part responsible for the low returns to farmers.

How New Plan Will Operate

As noted, the above prices are tentative. By investigation and public hearings the control board will determine what is a reasonable price for the consumer to pay in various sections of the State, based on cost of production and handling. It is the intent of the law that a fair and reasonable share of the profits assured commercial milk dealers by thus fixing the price for the consumer shall be passed on to the producer. In the event that it is not done in any section the board has the power to fix the minimum price to be paid the producers in that area. All dealers selling more than 45 quarts of milk a day, or selling in a community of more than 1000 population, must be licensed, the fee runnnig from $25 to $5,000 a year. The board may revoke the license of any dealer found guilty of "unfair trade practices".

Some of the Ruinous Prices

The prices quoted above are to obtain outside of New York City. Other prices will prevail there. Hearings for that city are being held today, for Buffalo tomorrow. The plan is to thus investigate all the cities, from the largest down. The board has already learned of milk being sold regularly for four cents a quart. In one case half a pint of cream was given away with each dozen eggs sold. Cream was elsewhere being sold on the basis of 17 cents a pound for butter. In the complete schedule the price of cream will be on a fixed ratio to that of milk, and provisions will be made for a higher price for milk of extra butter-fat content.

Renege on Pay Cut

In the early part of the legislative session, when a pay cut for State employees was under consideration, all the Senators and Assemblymen entered into an agreement that they would voluntarily reduce their own pay in the sum of $155, or approximately six per cent. When final pay day arrived last week, each of the Senators Republican and Democratic, took the cut as promised. So did each of the Republican Asesemblymen. But 20 of the 62 Assemblymen from New York City insisted upon receiving full pay, which was given them, since there was no way of holding them to their agreement. All of them were Democrats.

La Follette Reports

Former Governor Philip La Follette of Wisconsin, just returned from a tour of Europe, called upon President Roosevelt to report conditions, particularly in Russia. . . . La Follette has been mentioned for a federal post in return fof support given the President during the campaign last fall.

Boatmen revel in these warmer days with longer hours of sunlight, for they herald Fitting Out time and the approach of the active season afloat.

Whether it be canoe or speedy runabout, outboard powered dinghy or cruiser, there is work to be done in getting any boat ready; but it is work that brings joy to the heart of the amateur sailor.

A thorough cleaning job is the first step in any case. And remember that cleanliness in the bilge where it doesn't show, is even more important than in those parts that can be seen.

With a cruiser or any boat under cover you can do much work inside until you can be reasonably certain of settled weather. A sudden rain will stain a newly scraped deck or ruin a fresh coat of paint.

Once you start with the painting, proceed in orderly fashion and don,t try to do a week's work in an afternoon or a day. Be sure the surface is really dry and free from oil or grease spots. Remove the latter by washing with gasoline. Paint will not adhere to a moist or oily surface.

Keep in mind that two or even three thin, even, well brushed out coats of paint are best. A thick coat will look all right for a short time, but is almost sure to peel, scale or blister in a bdief time. In the case of old and shabby paint, accumulation of many old coats, remove to the bare wood by burning with a blow torch, or try one of the efficient paint removers now available.

For boat use, never apply any thing but a reputable marine finish. Ordinary house paint is not suitble. The cost may be a trifle more but it represents economy. Your own labor or labor you pay for represents the big item in painting a boat—or anything else. Real marine paint will last and look well for a long time.

Be sure to use good brushes and clean ones, and also only clean paint pots or cans. Likewise, when you open a can of paint, see that it is thoroughly stirred until the entire contents is of one proper consistency before you use a brushful. Let every coat dry hard before you apply a second.

Varnished parts, such as rails, mouldings and other trim, should be sanded smooth, worn parts stained to match, then covered with at least two even, thin coats of a good varnish of spar quality. Never apply varnish when it is cold; both the surface and the finish should be reasonably warm for good results.

Work? Of course it's work, but there's inspiration in visions of the fine days and the good times ahead.

SOIL TEST SHOWS WHERE SPUDS SCAB

A survey of 313 New York state potatoe fields in 1932 showed that scab affected 20 per cent of the tubers from fields of limestone soils; tubers grown in non-limestone soils had nine per cent infected.

Potatoes are grown extensively on limestone soils in western New York where no limestone need be applied to grow alfalfa. The district includes: most of Genesee county, southern Monroe and northern Livingston, Ontario, and parts of Seneca, Cayuga, Onondaga, and Oneida counties. The counties in the southern tier that grow potatoes have mostly acid, non-limestone soils, where scab occurs only in rare spots.

In the districts where scab is most prevalent, the thick skinned varieties like the Russet Rural had the least scab, followed in order by Smooth Rural, Cobbler, and Green Mountain. Up-to-dates had the most scab. Seed treatment apparently reduced the amount of scab from five to fifteen percent. The crop usually had less scab, on the average, when potatoes were planted immediately following sod rather than following cultivated crops. Stable manure, despite the old belief that fresh manure induced scab, made practically no difference in the amount of scabby potatoes.

These findings are reported by F. M. Blodgett of the New York state college of agriculture.

KEEPING KITCHEN FLOORS CLEAN

Spring brings muddy feet tracks to kitchen floors. These tracks have even been known to cause family friction. Cleaning kitchen floors without taking too much time and energy is a real problem in some kitchens, says Miss Ella Cushman of the state college of home economics, at Cornell University. She points out that the finish of the floor has much to do with the time and energy spent in keeping the floor clean.

Oiling is the cheapest and most durable way to finish a new floor, and oiled floors are easy to clean if the right kind of oil is properly applied. Varnish or paint may be used, but worn spots in these finishes can not be patched successfully, and complete refinishing is necessary once or twice year.

A dark, inconspicuous pattern of linoleum which will not show dirt readily is satisfactory for the majority of floors. Of the kinds of linoleum on the market, inlaid linoleum is the most expensive and wears the longest. Felt-back and printed linoleum have surface patterns and are comparatively thin; consequently they wear out quickly. Inlaid linoleum, however, has the design going through to the back, and a medium quality of inlaid linoleum, if properly laid, should last a lifetime with good protection and careful cleaning. The safest method to lay linoleum is by cementing, which is good economy, though it must be done by a skilled person with special equipment.

Printed linoleums may be adequately protected by varnishing at regular intervals and washing with clear water or mild soapsuds. Spar varnish should be used for most wear, but if the darkening effect of this type is objectionable, clear linoleum varnish may be preferable. Inlaid linoleum is generally either waxed or lacquered at the factory, and these finishes should be replaced once or twice a year. Waxed linoleum should not be lacqured without first removing the wax with alcohol, mild soap and clear water. Lacquer should never be applied to varnish, as it causes the varnish to peel.

Chicks need a ration containing from 18 to 20 per cent of protein the first month. The protein can be reduced to 17 or 18 per cent for the second month; 16 per cent for the third month; and to 15 per cent after the third month.

Uucle Ab says that resolution will accomplish wonders, but that a resolution never accomplished much.

"Can you cure it?"

These two questions make the "horns" of the dilemma in every case treated or applying for treatment. Both questions are of the highest importance for the doctor and patient.

A doctor may know exactly what the trouble is—he may be the best of diagnosticians—yet he may be sadly deficient in his knowledge of the best remedies for the disease; so broad and deep is the science of medicine!

I believe there are hundreds—thousands of patients treated and cured—when the diagnosis was absolutely a mistaken one. How? Well, the skillful doctor treated the important SYMPTOMS.

The best doctor strives to be equal to the answer to both of the questions at the head of this letter; happy the physician that can, truthfully answer both.

Suppose the doctor cannot accurately diagnose the case—yet believes he has done so; I'd trust that doctor anywhere. Why? Just because he knows what remedy to apply for the symptoms.

I would be perfectly willing for a doctor to treat me who knows well the action of the medicine he uses; he knows the cause that will bring about the effect. A good physiologist is a good doctor; the man who knows healthy life is quick to recognize any departure from it. Physiology is the science of life.

I am not so devilish particular about a technical diagnosis; I do not care how many red cells a man has, just so I know he is anaemic. Now teach, if you want to!

Seventh Installment

The Story so far: Joyce Ashton, poor stenographer, in a skidding taxicab accident in Chicago, suffered loss of memory. Two years later she woke one morning after a fall from her horse to find herself, under the name of Frills, married to Neil Packard, rich California fruit packer. From letters in her desk she learned something about her life in the two-year interval, and realized that she had been a heartless, reckless young woman and that she is seriously involved in an affair with a man named Maitland. She decided that at all costs she would end it, but she found Maitland hard to manage. Her troubles were further complicated when she read a letter referring to a baby—was it hers?—that the writer, Sophie, thought Frills ought to have with her. Much to the surprise of Sam, in her husband's employ, she asked for a dog and he got her one.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Joyce's heart sank as she examined her guests, wondering who they were. The second speaker was a short blonde girl, whose plumpness gave definite threat of turning her into a fat woman at middle age. Her features were of the curved baby variety, her eyes small and gray, and her mouth lipsticked into a pouting cupid's bow of the most vivid scarlet.

Both girls were dressed in smart sport clothes. The blonde's costume was of the latest cut and mode, but completely wrong for her figure and height.

The other young woman, who looked several years older, was a thin brunette with sharp features, stiffly marcelled hair, large greenish-gray eyes and languid manners.

Both women were smoking cigarettes, and Joyce nervously lighted one to bolster up her own courage. Then she waited for some one else to speak.

"What did you do all day yesterday?" demanded the blonde one, "You weren't in bed, were you?"

"No, I felt rotten," replied Joyce.

"You had it coming to you! It's a wonder we're not viewing the remains today. How did it happen anyhow, Frills?"

"Oh, forget it!" said Joyce, "It's all over now. I hate post-mortems."

"Sure, so do I," agreed the dark one, "guess it gave you a shock though, didn't it, Frills? You don't seem to have much zip today, somehow. That's what Mait noticed about you, said you acted half-dead."

"Did he? Well, that's the way I felt, but it's better than being completely out."

"I'll say," assented the blonde. Suddenly she started violently and let out a terrific oath . . . "Who let him in here?" she screamed shrilly, for Dickie had come up behind her and pushed his cold little nose against the plump pink hand which hung over the arm of the chair.

"Where did the cur come from, Frills?"

"He's mine. Sorry he scared you. Come here, Dickie." She jumped up, and sitting back in a chair, took Dickie in her lap, facing calmly the battery of disgusted surprise on the two faces.

"Are you coming out to Tess' tea at the club, Frills?" said Ethel.

"Why no . . . No, I'm not going anywhere this week," answered Joyce, trying to speak in a careless manner.

"Come on, Ethel," said Clarice, "you'll never go around in less than a hundred and fifty if you don't get out on the course more than once a month, you poor fat lazy female."

Ethel got up resignedly, and yawned. "We'll come over tonight. It sure isn't natural to see you so quiet, gal."

"I know where you can get a cat and a parrot, if you're going in for pets," said Clarice, on her way out.

"Thanks," said Joyce coldly.

She was so thoroughly disgusted and repelled by Ethel and Clarice that she could not bring herself even to attempt an imitation of what she supposed was the Frills manner. She accompanied them to the door, and watched them get into the bright green car.

At the opening in the high wall, they turned aside to let another machine enter, and Joyce's heart gave a disconcerting leap when she recognized Maitland's handsome face in the gray roadster that was entering. She turned and fled upstairs. "I can't face him till I've at least powdered."

Listening carefully she heard Maitland enter the house without ringing, and then whistle a few notes, which she knew must be his way of signaling Frills. She stood irresolute for a few moments, stroking Dickie. It had not occurred to her that he might come upstairs without an invitation. Therefore, she was distinctly startled when he calmly walked into the room, looking for her.

She faced him apprehensively, uncomfortably conscious of what had happened the day before.

"Hello, sweet! Everything O. K. now? Did you get a good night's sleep? Looks better to see you smoking, Frills. It gave me a funny feeling when you refused a cigarette yesterday."

Joyce had taken a cigarette when he came in and lighted it quickly. As he approached her, she retreated a few steps. Before she could reply to his words, however, he became aware of Dickie who jumped up at him with instant friendliness.

"Well! Hullo, old feller. Where did you come from, boy? Say, you're all right!! How come, Frills? You've never had any time for dogs before?" He looked up at her questioningly.

"I expect to have more from now on," replied Joyce coolly, though her heart was beating with suffocating speed, "because I shan't have you to take up so much of it."

Maitland looked frankly bewildered at her tone. "But what's the big idea? Am I going to be treated to more of this upstage stuff? I don't get you——"

"You seem surprisingly slow at understanding plain English. I mean that whatever there has been between us is all . . . all over now. I'm through." As she spoke Joyce moved toward the door. "Please come downstairs, I prefer not to discuss the matter up here."

"It's all over, and I want you to let me alone".

Maitland followed her and attempted to put his arm around her, but Joyce stepped hastily aside and ran down the stairs into the living-room.

"Oh well, all right," he agreed, "but . . . Frills, for Heaven's sake, think what you're saying and doing! You can't mean it, sweetheart! What's the use of going through all these noble dramatics for nothing! It's such a waste of time, when we could be so happy. Every minute when we're not together seems a waste of time to me . . . Oh, sweet, I love you so! You know that——" he came up to her, his voice thick, his handsome face intense.

Joyce hastily moved around to put a chair between them. "If you can't keep your hands off me," she said curtly, wondering at her own self-possession, "I'll simply refuse to talk at all." She eyed him warily, prepared to flee to the kitchen if he made a move toward her.

Maitland stared at her. He was breathing heavily, but he controlled himself by an obvious effort and lighting another cigarette with hands that shook, he said, "Oh, all right! Let's sit down quietly . . . I won't touch you, I swear it. Just sit down and . . . let's —let's talk it over."

As they sat down Joyce had a feeling of being on a stage and not knowing what her lines were. How would this act end? A return of the panicky terror swept over her, which turned into resentment against the man who was responsible for getting her into this uncomfortable situation.

"I can't see that there's anything to talk about," she began, "I meant what I said. It's all over, and I want you to let me alone."

"But, good God!" he exclaimed violently, "you can't just calmly throw me down that way, Frills, without a reason, without a word, without an explanation of what it's all about. You sit there and say in that frozen voice, 'It's all over'—you, who only Friday night planned to go away with me Wednesday, you, the only girl who . . ."

With flaming face, Joyce interrupted hastily, "An affair like this can't . . . can't go on forever, so it might as well end now—"

"But why, why, why? Judas, you never talked this way before."

He leaned forward and suddenly seized her wrist in an iron grip, exclaiming, "Frills, do you think I'm going to be thrown out like this with no more reason in the world than that you're through? Well, you're damn' well mistaken if you think so. I'm going to stick around and find out what you're up to, believe me. You're going to be mine, and by God, I don't give you up to any one else without a fight."

"Don't be so melodramatic," retorted Joyce, "and let go my wrist. You hurt me."

Her very calmness seemed to disarm him. Mechanically he took his hand away. Then, resting both elbows on his knees, he plunged his hands through his short black hair with an eloquently despairing gesture.

Joyce's spirits rose a little. She began to feel more confident of victory. She rose, and still holding Dickie, she continued, "You might as well go now. I haven't anything more to say. It won't be any use talk about it."

He lifted his head and looked at her searchingly. He was still nonplussed. Then he got to his feet and said, with unexpected calm, "All right. Whatever you say goes. But don't think for a minute that I'm through.

Joyce said nothing. Maitland walked out without another word and without attempting to kiss her again.

When Joyce woke, it was past six o'clock. Dickie had left her, and, slightly alarmed, she hurried downstairs to find him. Suppose he had gone home! She discovered him, however, in the kitchen calmly finishing his dinner, while Roxie, still not quite friendly, watched him closely.

She returned to the living-room to wait for dinner, and there found on the table another pile of letters with a telegram on top of them.

"Please mail brown envelope left on my desk to me hotel blackstone love Neil."

But where was Neil's desk? wondered Joyce, puzzled. She glanced vaguely about the big room but she knew already there was nothing so workmanlike as a desk in it.

When she had finished her dinner, she remembered Neil's telegram. She had better find the papers and mail them immediately. There must be a study or "den" somewhere in the house. Perhaps they even called it a "library." Where would it be? A little reflection suggested to her that the natural location was probably beyond Neil's dressing room, in the wing opposite her own boudoir. She did not remember a second door in the dressing room but when she went up to it, she found that there was one, just at the foot of the narrow bed, in the wall opposite the bathroom door.

She pushed on the electric button inside the room when she had opened the door, and a shaded desk lamp sprang into light. Exactly in the middle of this luminous circle lay the object of her search, a long brown envelope. "Well, that was easy," thought Joyce, relieved. She crossed the floor, looking about the room with interest. What would his study reveal of the character of Neil Packard—of her husband?

Joyce sat down at the desk to examine a square photograph frame more carefully. The picture, which showed a man and a pretty girl, was obviously an enlargement of a small snap. The girl was perched upon a shelf of rock, while the man stood close beside her. His right arm was around her waist, her left hand curled about his neck. Both were smiling broadly, and the girl's right hand waved an impudent greeting.

"Do I look that way when I smile?" wondered Joyce, "so . . . so self-confident and . . saucy?" She stared at the picture. "Neil has a nice smile. There's something about it that's quieter and more sincere than Frills' grin.

There was a short row of books standing on the desk top, held in place by two heavy bronze bears; and a basket in which she found stationery and leaflets inscribed "Packard Fruit Packing Co., Inc., Manzanita, Cal." So that was Neil's business.

She could find no pen with which to address the brown envelope, and decided to take it to her own room to prepare for mailing. Before she left the desk, however, she discovered something which set her heart thumping with mingled pain and pleasure. In one of the side drawers, which she had opened to look for a pen, she found a few loose snapshots.

One picture Joyce lingered over. It was Neil sitting beside a sweet-faced elderly woman against a background of roses. That was undoubtedly his mother. She wondered if Mrs. Packard were living, and if so, what she thought of Frills.

EARLY ROOSTING IS TABOO

By Prof. A. G. Phillips

Because of the desire of many poultrymen to prevent crowding and "piling up" of chicks during the early growing stage, there has developed the recommendation of using roosts as soon as the young birds will go on to them.

The principle of getting chicks off the floor as soon in life as possible is sound, but roosts should not be used as the means of accomplishing this idea. Close meshed wire is better.

Where narrow wooden roosts are used during the growing period, there is a sure chance that crooked keels or breast bones will be developed. This greatly reduces the market value of the carcass.

An experiment recently conducted at the New Jersey Experiment station to determine the cause of crooked keels in cockrels involved three week old chicks that were fed no cod liver oil and different levels of oil, both with and without roosts.

"At eight weeks of age 26.6 per cent of the cockrels receiving no oil and having no roosts had crooked keels; whereas the birds receiving 1 per cent and 2 per cent respectively of cod liver oil in their ration and having no roosts had perfectly straight keels in all instances. On the other hand 66.6 per cent of the birds receiving the basal ration and roosts had crooked keels; and 44.4 of the birds receiving 2 per cent cod liveroil and roosts had crooked keels.

The bone ash percentage in the leg bones of the chicks receiving cod liver oil, but having crooked keels, was over 45 per cent. This is considered satisfactory.

Cod liver oil at different levels did reduce but did not prevent crooked keels. In every case roosts were used with chicks between the ages of three and eight weeks, there was a high percentage of undesirable breast bones.

Crooked keels in birds do not, therefore, necessarily indicate a vitamin D deficiency in the ration, but they do reflect on the general management of the flock.

Farmers Win Fight For Lower Truck License Fee

The removal of the 65 per cent surtax on the truck license fee saves the farmer truck-owner of New York State on the average $15.95 according to figures furnished by the farm bureau. There are 56,000 farm trucks in the state and the gross savings amount to approximately one million dollars.

The survey made by the farm bureau last summer, for which 12,000 farmers furnished information shows that the average farm truck travels 2483 miles on the highway a year. The surtax applied to this mileage would be the equivalent of a tax of 18.6c per gallon of gas consumed.

It was also shown by the survey figures that 70 per cent of the farmers would not register their vehicles if the license fee had been increased. On the basis of that statement the Federation estimated that should the surtax continue in force the state would receive from the license of farm trucks less than one-half the license revenue received in 1932.

Farmers in all parts of the state sighed a sigh of relief when the legislature voted not to levy the increase, for thousands found it impossible to license trucks under the excessive rates, which would require 150 bushels of potatoes, 50 cans of milk, 90 bushels of apples, 40 bushels of beans or 15 tons of cabbage just to purchase a license for the farm truck.

TELL ME AN INDIAN STORY

Moving Day in the Woodland

The warm sun of the springtime was playing hide and seek with the clouds and every time a cloud covered the sun, the cold wind came dawn from the snow-capped hill and blew his cold breath at the little chickadee.

Now the chickadee had been in his warm winter wigwam in the southland and had arrived in the north on the day that the cool wind blew.

So he sang to himself, "Chickadee was foolish to come up north where it is cold". He was afraid that he would soon free to death unless he found shelter.

He poured out a song, "Oh, cold wind, go away or chickadee will freeze!"

Mr. Woodpecker, with a long bill, heard the song from the top of the next tree. He felt sorry for the little chickadee, lately arrived from the south, and he told the visitor to peck a hole in the tree trunk and stay there until summer came.

Since the chickadee did not have a long bill, the friendly woodpecker said, "You take my winter home in the hollow of the elm, for I build a new home high in the tree top for the summer."

The little chickadee was grateful, so he called to his mate, and together they moved into the woodpecker's winter home. The woodpecker was happy for he had done a good turn for the visitor.

So, when you go into the woods you will see Mr. and Mrs. Woodpecker leaving their winter home, a hollow in the tree trunk, in which the chickadees will have a nice home all summer.

How What and Why?

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

To Prevent Molt

Mrs. E. L. asks: "Why do my hens molt several times a year? The pullets that were hatched last May have molted twice".

Professor W. G. Krum says, "The molt has probably been caused by improper or irregular feeding and a loss of body weight. Keep dry mash before the birds all the time. Give them a grain mixture of corn and wheat, a light feeding in the morning and all that they will clean up at night."

Milk For Pigs

K. V. B. asks: "How much are skimmilk and buttermilk worth as a hog feed? How much should be fed?"

John P. Willman says. "Skimmilk and buttermilk are rich in protein and minerals and are excellent supplements to grain mixtures for both growing and fattening pigs. About six to ten pounds of milk can be fed daily to pigs that are self-fed, or full-fed on yellow corn or hominy and that have no pasture. If the pigs have good pasture, five or six pounds of milk are enough. Slightly smaller amounts of milk are needed when the pigs are fed barley or wheat in place of corn. When fed in these proportions, with corn costing forty cents a bushel and tankage $35 a ton, skimmilk and buttermilk are worth about twenty cents a hundred pounds."

L. W. asks: "How does 'process' cheese differ from regular cheese? Do the cheeses differ in food value?"

Professor W. E. Ayres, says "Process cheese is cheese which has been subjected to heat treatment, and to which a small amount of an emulsifying agent has been added. The process cheese may have slightly less food value, because a small amount of water is added during the treatment.

"Where a sufficient amount of business is done, the cheeses are graded by an expert to make a blend of high-flavored and mild-flavored cheeses. The rind is removed, the cheese ground into fine pieces in a mill, and then placed in a kettle heated with a steam-filled jacket. Some water is given off in to the heating and to avoid shrinkage, a little amount of water is added to the cheese before heating. If the condition of the cheese requires an emulsifying agent, to make a satisfactory emulsion of the fat and solids, from one-half per cent to two and one-half per cent of disodium phosphate is added. A small amount of salt may also be used.

"The mass is then heated to approximately 175 degrees Fahrenheit, and held at that temperature, under constant gentle agitation, until a satisfactory fluid condition has developed. The cheese is drawn directly into the packages in which it is retailed. The heating process serves to pasteurize the cheese, and while it does not render the cheese free from bacteria, the temperature is high enough to kill disease-producing germs.

"The processing of cheese first began with ordinary cheese, but other types like Limburger and Swiss, are now processed. The chief advantages are that the processed cheese has no rind, and requires less refrigeration in stores. In fifteen years the process has become accepted and now a considerable amount of the cheese made in the United States is sold in this form."

VERY LATEST by Mary Marshall

This smart and simply-made suspender frock in miniature, is a copy of big sister's in many of its style notes.

It can be made of various combinations of fabrics. For general wear sheer woolens may be used for the pleated skirt and suspenders, with a dimity or crepe blouse.

A gingham skirt and batiste blouse are suitable for playtime wear, while a printed crepe skirt with a blouse of plain crepe in harmonizing color may be made for special occasions.

The puffed sleeves and design of the suspenders give width to the shoulders, adding a new note. Buttons through the skirt form a practical closing and add a bit of trimming.

This model is designed in sizes 4, 6, 8, and 10. Size 8 requires one and one-sixth yards for the skirt and suspenders and one and one-eighth yards for the blouse, of 35-inch material. The bow at the neck requires one-half yard of ribbon.

THE SCHOOL CHILD'S LUNCH

Sweet Sandwiches

When no other sweet is used in the lunch, an auxiliary sweet sandwich may be added says the Consumers Information Service of the New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets. This may be raisin bread, orange bread, or nut bread buttered, and a sweet filling, such as jelly, jam, fruit butter, conserve, or honey, may be used.

A good fruit mixture for a sandwich filling is made by grinding dried fruits, adding chopped nuts, if desired, and moistening with lemon juice or fruit juice.

Other sweets suitable for a school child's lunch includes plain cake, cookies and cooked fruits.

THE "NEW DEAL" GARDEN

Food retails at about double its farm price in normal conditions, while now it retails at about four times the farm price. Because of this, many people plan to have a productive garden this year.

The more carefully the garden is planned and cared for, the more profitable it will be. Why not spend the next few evenings talking about the things you want to grow? It will save time later if you draw a plan of your garden, grouping the small-growing and quick maturing crops on one side and the large-growing and slow-maturing crops on the other side. Make allowances for second plantings and plan to grow enough vegetables for a year around supply. The successful home garden furnishes a liberal supply of fresh vegetables, well distributed throughout the growing season, with enough extra for canning, drying, and storage to last until next spring.

Start your garden early. Spinach, peas, beets, carrots, radishes, and lettuce may be planted as soon as the ground can be worked. The warm season crops, such as snap beans, sweet corn, and squash may be planted as soon as the weather is favorable. Allow for second plantings, usually in lateJune or early July, of snap beans, sweet corn, beets, carrots, and lettuce. This lengthens their season and provides good quality vegetables for storage. Grow more tomatoes and snap beans for canning, and more beets, carrots, cabbage, onions (from sets), parsnips, turnips, and winter squash for storage.

Action is in order. Let us give our garden a new deal, and save money on food.

Federal Director Robert Fechner of the Emergencw Conservation work has to date asked for only two quotas of men from New York State, 7,500 men from New York City and 600 men from the City of Buffalo. These quotas were decided upon by the Federal director, for whom the State Temporary Emergency Relief Administration acts as ogent in New York State.

When any further quotas from other districts than New York City or Buffalo are decided upon by Mr. Fechner, the State Temporary Emergency Relief Administration will immediately transmit that information to localities concerned.

4-H CLUB NEWS

Minnesota Boys Hustlers

As pig and corn producers Minnesota 4-H boys are setting a fast pace. In the pig raising contest the boys put it all over the men in making heavy ton litters. A 4-H boy made the most gain, and 8 of the 10 high producers of both adult and boy contestants were made by the youngsters.

John Miller, of Winona County, made the top record, producing a litter which weighed 3,500 pounds at six months of age. It was a fine recognition for the boy, as he had been working hard to master the problems of raising pigs profitably for eight years through 4-H club projects. His winning was made in the last year of his club work. In his work he had received encouragement and guidance from county agent Harold Pederson.

Running the 4-H champion a hard race for first was an adult who produced a litter weighing 3,383 pounds. Only one of the high ten winners made less than 3,000 pounds. These records compare well with the best which have been made in any of the pig raising states by either adults or club boys.

Champion 4-H corn grower for 1932 in Minnesota is Darwin Todd, 15, also of Winona county. There were 963 boys enrolled in the state contest. The champion harvested 123 bushels of corn on his acre. His selection was also based on fine exhibits he had made at local, state and national shows, and the records he submitted. This boy and 14 of his nearest rivals will receive prize trips to the next state fair to take part in a crop judging contest.

Keen Interest Taken In Prohibition Conference

The Prohibition Emergency Conference called by prominent church leaders in the State of New York, to be held in Syracuse on April 25th and 26th, will be largely attended according to reports coming in to the committee on arrangements. Delegations from every county in the state will be present.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell will deliver the key note address on Tuesday, April 25 at 10 A. M. Dr. Albert W. Beaven, president of the Rochester Colegate Divinity School and also president of the Federation Council of Churches of Christ, will preside Tuesday afternoon. Both of these meetings will be held in the ball room of the Onondaga. Hon. John McSparran, Secretary of Agriculture for Pennsylvania and Dr. Norman V. Peale of New York, are the speakers Tuesday evening, when the session will be held in the First Baptist Church.

Railroad rates of one and a half fare on the certificate plan have been granted on all railroads of New York State for this conference. Tickets are available as early as April 20th, with a return limit of 30 days.

LOVE AND MUSIC

According to well founded rumors a prominent Addison village official took unto himself a wife within the last few days. Confirmation of the report is lacking, but a loud and long-sustained "horning bee" took place on South street last night, not far from the village hall. Besides all the recognized and unrecognized musical instruments designed by fiend or angel, the voices of some 100 serenaders took up a refrain of "pass the seegars".

Not content with charming the newlywed couple with music, the "horners" secured a supply of firecrackers, and turned the affair into a near Fourth of July celebration.

Because Your Friends
Don't Have a Bank Account
IS No Reason Why You Shouldn't

Spending all for appearances soon ends in disappointment.

AN OUTWARD SHOW is not always an indication of true worth.

LIKE the cork on a fishing line, it dances around and attracts a lot of attention, but it's the hook that's doing the business.

Keep your good appearance but back it up with a bank account.
